GOV. BULKELEY'S SENATE SEAT

A CAVALIER OF TWENTY YEARS
AT LAST SUCCESSFUL.

The Governor of Connecticut, who paid the State's expenses for a year out of his own pocket, to succeed Gen. Hawley in the Senate at Washington.

Hartford, Jan. 28. Morgan Gardner Bulkeley of this city, the "Crowbar Governor" of Connecticut, who has just been elected to succeed Gen. Joseph R. Hawley as United States Senator from the Nutmeg State, has occupied a unique place in Connecticut politics for twenty-five years. For one thing, though he served for two years as Governor of the State, he was never elected to the office directly by the people. The first time he got possession of the office through the General Assembly of the State he retained it by an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Little tradition along the Connecticut River near where Senator Bulkeley was born last that the first word he heard to say was "Senator," and that at his first glance at a geography he pointed his child's finger at Washington and then smilingly looked at his purse. He had his eyes fixed in the direction of the nation's capital and for the next twelve years he has openly declared himself a candidate for the first vacant seat in the Senate.

His political preparation for the office began just thirty years ago, when he won out in a ward fight for a seat in the city's Common Council. From there he entered the Aldermanic chamber.

Then for eight years, beginning with 1880, he was the head of the city government. When Mayor introduced such financial reforms that Hartford became a model. It was only a short step from the City Hall here to the Capitol on the hill and Mayor Bulkeley made it in 1889, thanks to the Legislature. He did not receive the majority of votes required in Connecticut to elect a Governor, but as the Legislature was Republican, he gave him the office and he took his seat in January of that year.

Then came at the next election the deadlock Assembly which carried Gov. Bulkeley over another term. It was during this session that he won his title of "Crowbar Governor."

None of the candidates for Governor had a majority of the votes and the Legislature could not elect because the Senate was Democratic by a majority of 5, while the Republicans held the House by 15. In the deadlock that resulted Gov. Bulkeley held over.

The Comptroller, Nicholas Staub of New Milford, was the only Democratic State official in power. He had charge of the Capitol and took the position that Gov. Bulkeley was an intruder after the close of his first term and had no official rights whatever in the Capitol.

The Governor was in the habit of walking from his executive chambers into the Senate hall when he felt like it. One day the Democratic Senators wanted to hold a secret session and at their request Comptroller Staub locked the Governor out of the Senate chamber. Mr. Bulkeley promptly got a crowbar and broke his way in. The next week all the Republican legislators wore miniature crowbars on their watch chains as souvenirs of the victory and the name that has stuck to Senator Bulkeley ever since was conferred on him.

Senator Bulkeley has the distinction of being the only Governor so far as known in this country who paid out of his own pocket all the State expenses during his two years in office. The deadlock in the Legislature prevented the passage of any appropriation bill to pay running expenses. When the question of borrowing the necessary funds came up Gov. Bulkeley came forward with $100,000 which he put at the disposal of the State, relying on the next General Assembly to reimburse him. The first act of the Legislature of 1893 was to accept the accounts of the former Governor and pay him without question.

When the question came up of an appropriation for Connecticut's representation at the world's fair at Chicago, Senator Bulkeley saw that the Legislature would make no appropriation for the purpose and called a meeting of manufacturers and others and collected by private subscription a larger fund than would have been secured from the State Treasury.

At the dedication of the world's fair in October, 1902, Gov. Bulkeley refused to parade until he was allowed to be escorted by the Foot Guards of the State whom he took with him for the purpose. There was a wrangle between Connecticut's representatives and those in charge of the parade, the latter urging that it was a civic affair and that the Nutmeg State was the only one demanding a military display.

"The Foot Guards are as much my escort as my staff," replied Gov. Bulkeley. "Where I go they will go. I brought them here for that purpose." And they went.

Since stepping down from the Capitol Senator Bulkeley has been the adviser-in-chief of the managers of the Republican party in Connecticut, always with the understanding that Washington was still on the map. Whenever the wheels of the party machine needed lubrication the manager names have always relied on the former Governor to furnish the oil.

His reputation for generosity has made him a chain of friends that extends across Connecticut. His popularity among the Grand Army men has been demonstrated frequently at national encampments.

His pluck and perseverance in the pursuit of whatever he sets out to accomplish not only landed him in the United States Senate, but also won for him a wife, according to the story told here. At a dinner party one evening some of the guests were jollying him on his popularity with the Hartford girls, when the wife, who, before her marriage, twenty years ago, was Miss Fanny B. Houghton of San Francisco, turned to him and said jokingly:

"Well, I made him come across the country for me."

"Yes, that's right," quickly replied the Senator. "But I got what I went after, as I generally do."

Mrs. Bulkeley is president of the Colonial Dames of Connecticut and both she and her husband are identified with the various historical societies. These associations are perhaps responsible for Mr. Bulkeley's great interest in antiques. Dealers from the great South, East and West know him as the ready bidder at all the auctions of famous collectors in the country. His persistence in bidding when he takes a fancy to an article frequently has resulted in his paying upon delivery for the things that he insisted upon carrying away with him. His large collection of antiques in this part of the country.

Made to Measure--An Unmatchable Offer.

Plain facts--woolens are going up in cost every day, as you must know, and it is mighty hard to get pure woolens at anything like a reasonable price even now. Advance in cost is unprecedented. We know that next year we will have to pay a big advance for our materials. We are paying it now, in fact. Several styles of fine woolens that we have been converting into clothes this season, however, at $30.00 to $40.00 are exhausted, save single suit or two and three suit lengths.

Our invariable policy of clearing out these pieces makes this splendid opportunity. You cannot appreciate what an important sale this is, until you have seen the materials. Men who took advantage of a similar sale a week ago requested a repetition for friends this week. Single or double breasted sack suits up to 42 breast measure, tailoring, trimming and workmanship that have made this the foremost custom organization in Brooklyn. Above 42 breast measure an additional charge is made for extra material required.
Second floor, rear, East Building.

Balloon and Cane Day in the Toy Store.

To every purchaser in the Toy Store of 24c. worth and over to-morrow will be given a big, fine French Balloon, fastened to an Old Glory cane. As the Toys are from 1/4 to 1/2 less than regular prices, you can make a saving on your purchase and at the same time delight the youngster with one of these fine Balloons and Cane Games.

All the newest Card Games are here. The regular prices are from 45c to 50c. Our price, 30c. Sherlock Holmes, Pitt, Stage, Bunco, Finish, Bird Center, etc.; also the latest Games, Trusts and Busts and Frenzied Finance.

China : The Great February Sale

In Quality, Magnitude and Value Giving Unrivaled.

THE HOUSEKEEPER, THE HOTEL MAN, the lover of beautiful wares--every one who has to do with the management of a home--will find keen interest in the great event announced to-day. It comes annually at this season. We make it the crowning effort of the whole year. And this year it far surpasses in volume, in character and in low pricing anything that Brooklyn has ever known.

The Sale includes China, Cut Glass, Bric-a-Brac, Clocks and kindred wares. It offers an immense and magnificent stock, as fine and practically as new as could be bought anywhere to-day. It offers this whole stock at a Third to Half Under Our Customary Prices.

In a few cases the reduction is only a fourth. In some cases it is more than half. The average saving which the Sale brings is about forty per cent.

The CHARACTER of the wares in this Sale cannot be realized unless you see them. They are not "seconds." They are not even patterns and designs which have been slow in selling. From one end of the Sale to the other they are new, absolutely perfect, superb in details of design and finish. We could go nothing finer. There is nothing finer made.

It is a Sale that will appeal especially to the lover of beautiful things as well as to the practical housekeeper. The strength of the Sale is along these lines of most artistic productions. Its greatest values are among the Art Pieces that are seldom to be had under price.

Many details follow. They are worth careful reading, for they state the facts conservatively. But only by a visit here to-morrow will you realize how fully this sale is without a parallel in Brooklyn--how surely such an offering is possible to no other store but Loeser's.
